The power of Gazprom

Demand for natural gas is increasing throughout the world. Gaz company and the largest company in Russia. In 2008 it had more of gas in its domestic market and more than a quarter of sales in wants to grow even further and has set itself the objective of beco by 2013, overtaking large companies such as General Electric a question whether European consumers will benefit if Gazprom European market.

In 2007 Gazprom earned a profit of US$21.6 billion. In 2008 its profit had increased by 11%. Despite this rise, the company reduced its dividend by 86% at the start of 2009 to just 37 kopecks (approximately US 2 cents) per share. The company had large debts of US$33 billion.

Gazprom was also planning to spend US$32 billion in 2009 building pipelines through the Baltic and to new gas reserves in remote Arctic regions even though demand for gas was forecast to decline over the next four years.

In its search for a greater share of the market, Gazprom recruits some of the best engineers and buys capital equipment from a variety of countries.
