Section A: Research Methods

For Examiner's Use

1 Many sociologists favour the positivist perspective. Positivists seek to identify patterns and trends in society. To achieve this, they use methods that are designed to gain quantitative data. Positivists believe that these methods allow the patterns and trends in society to be studied in an objective way. Positivists also prefer using large-scale surveys and for this they identify a survey population. They believe that generalisations can be made from these surveys that researchers can then test.

By contrast, sociologists who favour the interpretivist perspective prefer to collect information through smaller-scale studies. Interpretivist sociologists believe that this is the best way to understand the meanings and motives that influence the way individuals act in society. Participant observation is a method widely used in carrying out detailed, small-scale studies of group behaviour.
